Pattern notes

- The pattern is based on the apache tear pattern.
- The joining chain is never counted as a stitch.
- The end chain is never counted as a stitch.
- First sc is always crocheted in the first stitch (same stitch as yarn is joined)
- Last sc is always crocheted in the last stitch.
- The stitch behind the treble in front loop only or front post is not crocheted.
- in row 5 to row 199 you always have 2 scs, 20 tr in flo in stitch two rows below and 82 scs in blo (except row 103)
- To understand the pattern, it can be divided in two sides. First half (stitch 1 to stitch 52) and second half (stitch 53 to 104)
- In row 6 to 102 the trebles are crocheted before the trebles of the row below in the first half. In the second half the trebles are crocheted after the trebles of the row below (except for the two trebles in the middle in row 5 and every fifth row, when you start a new diagonal row of trebles so to say)

- Row 103 is the “changing row”. It is the first row where the direction of the treble pattern changes and it is the first row to repeat a colour. The FPtr are crocheted around the trebles in row 101 which means that they are the same colour.

- After row 103 you change directions of the diagonal treble rows. That means that from row 104 to 199 in the first half of every row the treble is crocheted after the trebles of the row below. In the second half the trebles are crocheted before the trebles in the row below.(except for the first and last treble of row 106 and every fifth row, when you start a new diagonal row of trebles so to say)

- If you find the pattern notes confusing (especially the part where I try to explain the diagonal treble rows) just follow the written pattern and I hope you will understand what I mean.
- The pattern is adjustable by a multiple of 10 stitches. (5 stitches on every side which means that you add one repetition on every side). 10 stitches make the pattern approximately 6cm wider.
- Start every row with a long thread and leave a long thread of yarn (approximately 15 cm) when fastening off.
- A border is optional. I just cut off the threads at the same length. (ca.10cm)
